MONDAY, MAY 7, 1877.

Ex-Attorney Generals, Politicians and Journalists Ruined by Rum,

I visited the poor-house in the castern part of this city several days ago, and was struck with the histories that are connected with some of its unfortunate inmates. As many of the men to whom I will refer have friends here and clsewhere, I will not use any names, and will confine myself strictly to what is known to be true. I am satisfied that many of the men referred to would be better provided for if some of their friends know of their presence there. One of the first men that I met upon entering was a short, thick-set man with a Websterian head and a powerful voice. I have known him for many years as a lawyer, and am pretty well informed of his weakness, which is, in brief, the too frequent indulgence in liquor. Indeed that seems to be the trouble with all the men who are now with him. The man I refer to was at one time attorney general of Virginia. He stood very high as a lawyer. One of the lawyers who appeared before the electoral commission as "of counsel" for the democratic party studied in the office of this man. Several of the distinguished lawyers whom I could mention have also been at one time students in his office. If I mistake not. his father was at one time Attorney General of the United States. He has been very wealthy in his day, and is not by any means an old man vet. Another man I saw there was considerably older. Whiskey was his weakness also. His history is long, but pointed. At one time one of the judges of the Supreme bench of the State of California, he came to this city, soon after the inauguration of Buchanan, at the request of John W. Forney, to take the position of collector of the port of San Francisco. He resigned his judgship to come here. Upon arriving he called on Buchanan. At this time he had property and money in bank amounting to about $30,000. Something turned up which prevented him from receiving the position. He did not desire to return to California unless he secured the position, and, not securing it, he never returned. Feeling disappointed, he took to drink. He lounged about the hotels here for ten years following, occasionally getting a claim through some of the departments and drinking up the proceeds. It was not loog before he had spent his last dollar. For years he was supported by Col. Thomas H. Florence, of Philadelphia, "the widow's friend," and the most charitable man who was ever in Congress. After the death of Col. Florence, several years since, he had no one to look after him, and finally a newspaper what I have said in its praise. I can send you reporter who knew him secured a permit for certificates from Augusta, Clinton and Macon; him to spend the remainder of his days in the city almshouse, not being able, financially, to take care of himself. Did I use his name it would be recognized by many as the name of the most elequent man of the West, and of one who was very prominent, and who was a valuable friend to many who visited the golden shores during the gold fever of 1849. Leaving him I met a man that made a mark in Connecticut several years since. He was appointed special agent of the Postoffice Department by Governor Jewell, and, according to his own testimony before a committee of the House in the spring of 1875, he did nothing in return but make political speeches throughout Connecticut in favor of the "old man," as he titled Jewell. This man was at one time worth a great deal of property here and in Arkansas. At one time he was connected with the United States secret service, and rendered some remarkable work in the way of breaking up gange of counterfeiters, smugglers, etc. Whiskey don't help any detective, and when he "took to his cups" he had to give up his detective business. While intoxicated in Jersey City, less than too years ago, he "gave away" the details of a case that would soon have resulted in the capture of two or three hundred thousand dollars in counterfeit money, presses, plates, &c. It had cost the Govern. ment about five thousand dollars to get the information that he "gave away" to one of the parties who was to be arrested. When it was ascertained how the job failed, this man, who was afterwards the advocate of the "old man," was retired from the detective service. Afterwards he became prominent as a temperance I have heard a great many temperance speakers, and am free to admit that he was among the best. I am sure that those who heard him talk polities in Connecticut also thought that he was an excellent speaker. He has been in about a month. He is in the workhouse side, and has about sixty days yet to serve. In another branch of the insti tution I found a man who was at one time attorney general of the State of North Carolina, and at one time-not many years ago-held a prominent legal position in the Treasury Department. It is the same old story. He made many friends and drank a great deal of whiskey. After a while he drack so much that he neglected his profession and everything else. He has been about this city for about twelve years, and, except during the time he has been under lock and key, he never drew a sober breath. He is not a pauper now as he has a large claim Orders and inquiries from the country tofore the Treasury D partment for cotton taken during the war, he being a Union man, that will some time bring him in a handsome pile. He has borrowed a great deal on it and has drank it all up. The principal reason for his being put where he now is is that he stole a friend's vest and sold it for whiskey. Another little, old, gray haired man has a history, which is too long to be now printed. He resided in New Jersey. When Stephen A. Douglas traveled about the country making speeches when he was running for the Presidency, this man accompanied him, and always made speeches upon the same stand. Mr. Douglas entrusted to him many of the details of his canvass, having unbounded confidence in him. He bet all the money he had on Douglas, and lost it. Aftewards he west into the horse-racing business, and again failed. He then seld off his establishment and drank the proceeds. He has been a receiver of public charities for several years, though in the summer-time he goes out and makes a living as a horse doctor .- Wash. Cor. Hartford Times. NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

Desires to inform the public that he has again taken possession of his old stand, next door to the Gazette office, on Prince street, and will be happy to see all of his former patrons and any-body else who wants a pleasant and artistic SHAVE or HAIR CUT. jan 30-tf
